AN ASSUMPTION OF SCARCITY:

COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT

JOHN MCKIGHT

NEIGHBORHOOD ORGANIZATION AND COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT
I. Financial institutions will need to allocate a significant percentage of at least three basic resources are necessary:

1. 30-call economic expansion of scale are needed to implement local economic development strategies and improve the business climate within the neighborhood. If the city or area is smaller, once again, this description becomes the community's responsibility. If the city or area is smaller, the local neighborhood or business leaders will face additional challenges in creating a more robust and sustainable local economy.

2. Technical assistance and expertise

In order to reach the full potential of the local economy, it is important to have local business leaders and officials who can provide the necessary expertise and guidance. This may include assistance with grant writing, marketing strategies, or other business development activities. It is essential to have a strong network of supportive community organizations and leaders who can help guide the local economy towards sustainable growth.

3. Access to capital

In order to facilitate economic expansion, it is important to have access to capital for local businesses. This may include grants, loans, or other financial assistance. It is important to work with local financial institutions and government agencies to ensure that there is a robust network of support available for local businesses.

In summary, financial institutions will need to allocate a significant percentage of their resources to support the local economy. This includes allocating resources to help local businesses expand, providing technical assistance and expertise, and ensuring access to capital.

II. The neighborhood organization must now be recognized as a neighborhood organization and community development organization. Neighborhood residents must now be recognized as community leaders, and their role will be critical in promoting economic growth and development within the neighborhood. It is important for neighborhood organizations to work closely with local businesses and financial institutions to ensure that the neighborhood economy is sustainable and successful.

In conclusion, financial institutions will need to allocate a significant percentage of their resources to support the local economy. This includes allocating resources to help local businesses expand, providing technical assistance and expertise, and ensuring access to capital. Neighborhood organizations must now be recognized as community leaders, and their role will be critical in promoting economic growth and development within the neighborhood.
